Fake news is emerging as a serious problem for us all, influencing public opinions on political and health issues, and more. In the past few years, people have been deliberately spreading fake news to influence public opinion. This is known as "propaganda" or "disinformation." What is particularly concerning is the speed at which fake news spreads on the internet and social media. In the past, it took time for news to spread, but now, fake news can be shared and spread almost instantaneously. The spread of fake news has become a serious concern because it can spread misinformation and harm individuals and communities. It can also undermine the credibility of news sources and the public's trust in the media. The spread of fake news is a serious problem that needs to be addressed to protect our democracy and ensure that people have access to accurate information.
