Unite beyond race, class

MEXISO MUSHARI

WHILE South Africa has progressive laws on the empowerment of women, in practical terms women are not as far as they believe they are. Dr Devi Rajaj, a psychologist, said we can set their limits for women in their daily lives from the unconscious. High standards of living will automatically lead to the physical and emotional abuse, and solution is to be found in the strength to report these abuses.

"It is now time for all the people, who are always silent on women’s rights, to unite beyond race, class and work together in a workplace, where they can really shine," Rajaj said. She said it was also concerning that violence against women was dominant in the workplace, where they, too, were victims.

CHARLES SEMPITH

"Women are one of the most affected groups in all countries. We are always told to be silent, to be invisible, to be invisible to the world."

Sempith, the chief executive for the South African Red Cross, said women were often the silent victims of violence. "Women are one of the most affected groups in all countries. We are always told to be silent, to be invisible, to be invisible to the world."

She said women should not be afraid of failure and should always keep trying. "Women are one of the most affected groups in all countries. We are always told to be silent, to be invisible, to be invisible to the world."

VANESSA FEDDER

Live in your truth

Sometimes without you even knowing, a course is coming in the lives of others around you.

"Women are far more capable and power than I think we sometimes give ourselves credit for, but somewhere down the line we have allowed ourselves to believe that those who are in control are the only ones with power."

Said Fedder, a women’s rights activist. Fedder said women should not be afraid of failure and should always keep trying. "Women are far more capable and power than I think we sometimes give ourselves credit for, but somewhere down the line we have allowed ourselves to believe that those who are in control are the only ones with power."

Important to be ambitious

CAROL TDORI

Carly is inspired by women from different walks of life, from her own mother who ‘taught her to know to live her own truth and a new path."

"Women learn in different ways and it is important that we understand and support each other. Women have to be ambitious because if we fail, we are failing for each other as well. Women have to be ambitious because if we fail, we are failing for each other as well."
