Student rampages must end

Unilevers must take strong action against students who have committed crimes and destroyed property in many parts of South Africa, including Pofadder and, President Jacob Zuma said yesterday.

Addressing reporters at the Union Buildings in Pretoria, after a meeting that lasted several hours with the vice-chancellors of South African universities, Zuma said the law should take its course when students engaged in violent protests.

“I want to estimate that any shortfalls in financial aid and the.academic performance of students are the result of institutional problems,” he said.

“Unfairly students protesting, the same government and education system supported the right of protesters to have their concerns heard, as other higher education stakeholders, to explore solutions for their welfare and to prevent their participation in other forms of disorder.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“Right now, the universities are in a mess,” he said.

We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.

“The task team was expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“Right now, the universities are in a mess,” he said.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.

“We agreed to establish a task team made up of officials from the Department of Higher Education, the Department of Justice, the Department of Police, student representatives, and others as necessary, to report on the rate of disorders.”

The task teams were expected to make recommendations by the end of November, Zuma said, and the vice-chancellors were working on plans to conduct their processes, with students not being consulted on their proposals.