Sacrificing ego, partisan politics cost South Africa

IT'S THE economy, stupid. Until it's not. It's not sacrificing people's lives. At this stage of South Africa's (colourful but pain just happened) history, we are blessed to have people who are willing to work long hours and spend sleepless nights in the helm.

Our nation should thank its lucky stars that President Cyril Ramaphosa remained in power right up to this moment. He has been the right man in the right place at the right time to direct the social and economic recovery that has been highly visible during the lockdown, minimizing, to some extent, the economic and social costs of the epidemic. This week Mbhele unleashed globally respected Professor Salim Abdool Karim and the head of the World Health Organization (WCO) 9.15.10. Minister of Health Dr. Zweli Mkhize, and a layman's delivery, he told the nation what we all know but do not want to know about the virus. This is the kind of news that we would wish to avoid at all costs.

The mastermind while being the man in charge has to be identified the man to lead the charge. Right now, there has been the right man in the right place at the right time. At this time, he has been exceptionally visible during the lockdown, something he has not been able to do in the past due to various social and economic costs of the epidemic.

This week Mhlele unleashed globally respected Professor Salim Abdool Karim and the head of the World Health Organization (WCO) 9.15.10. Minister of Health Dr. Zweli Mkhize, and a layman's delivery, he told the nation what we all know but do not want to know about the virus. This is the kind of news that we would wish to avoid at all costs.

The mastermind while being the man in charge has to be identified the man to lead the charge. Right now, there has been the right man in the right place at the right time. At this time, he has been exceptionally visible during the lockdown, something he has not been able to do in the past due to various social and economic costs of the epidemic.

The mastermind while being the man in charge has to be identified the man to lead the charge. Right now, there has been the right man in the right place at the right time. At this time, he has been exceptionally visible during the lockdown, something he has not been able to do in the past due to various social and economic costs of the epidemic.